SUGGESTIONS FOR FURTHER READING
Compiled by Johnny Lin
June 2008

SETTING THE PHILOSOPHICAL STAGE

In this series of lectures, Lewis highlights some of the limitations of the “scientific” worldview, particularly as it relates to morality.

A brilliant description of the human condition, the nature of sin, and the nature of virtue. Lewis’s conception of humility has been particularly helpful in my life.

Noll’s historical analysis provides an invaluable context to understanding the cultural dynamics of the “life of the mind” in the American evangelical church.

Peterson provides a role model of someone who integrates a passionate and worshipful spirituality with a keen awareness of the life of the mind. He loves Jesus and he loves novels, and he tries to synthesize love and intellect in a deep and non-superficial way.

This book on spiritual formation illuminates not just the importance of transformation of the spirit and soul, but also the transformation of the mind.

BEING A CHRISTIAN AND AN ACADEMIC

This historical analysis of the trends in American universities that led to the marginalization of faith perspectives is fascinating as well as humbling. Well argued, this is an important work for those who wish to engage the academy.

This book presents an evangelical theology of work, that shows the Scriptural foundations of regarding “secular” (including academic) work as opportunities of obeying and worshipping God.

SCIENCE AND CHRISTIANITY

Barr, who is a particle physicist at the University of Delaware, deftly examines the intersection between modern physics and Christian faith, finding modern physics bolsters the case for Christianity more than the case for atheistic materialism. Barr presents an extremely fair and evenhanded description of atheistic materialism before offering his critique.

Collins, was the head of the International Human Genome project, and offers a compelling testimony as one of the foremost geneticists in the world and a lover of Jesus. This book is written more for an audience of agnostics.

A concise, well-written, and balanced introduction to the issues surrounding the relationship between faith and science, including creation/evolution and miracles/scientific laws.

Ross presents a modern concordism that, even if you disagree with him, nonetheless is a fascinating and interesting story.

http://www.asa3.org
Home page of the American Scientific Affiliation, a fellowship of Christians. Their web site provides articles and other resources on a variety of faith/science topics.

BIBLIOGRAPHIES

http://www.yale.edu/ygcf/variou...html
An excellent reading list, “A Beginner's Christian Bookshelf,” compiled by David Lyle Jeffrey (Emeritus Professor of English Literature, University of Ottawa).

http://www.intervarsity.org/gfm/resource/bibliography-for-christian-academics
A bibliography on the integration of faith and scholarship, sponsored by IVCF’s Graduate and Faculty Ministries.